The Creation Curse

Victor Frankenstein had always been fascinated by science. From a young age, he wanted to understand the mysteries of life. As he grew older, his curiosity turned into an obsession. He studied tirelessly, learning everything he could about chemistry, biology, and human anatomy. But Victor didn't just want to learn—he wanted to create.

One night, in his secret laboratory, Victor finally succeeded in his greatest experiment. Using pieces of different bodies and the power of lightning, he brought a creature to life. At first, he was thrilled. He had done something no one else had ever done! He had created life, just like nature itself. But when the creature opened its yellow eyes and reached out with its large hands, Victor felt a deep fear. Instead of feeling like a brilliant scientist, he felt like he had made a terrible mistake.

Victor abandoned his creation, hoping it would disappear. But the creature didn't vanish—it learned, grew, and began to feel lonely. It wanted a friend. It wanted love. But everywhere it went, people screamed and ran in fear. No one saw the creature's heart; they only saw its frightening appearance. Heartbroken and angry, the creature searched for Victor, demanding an answer: "Why did you create me if you were only going to leave me alone?"

Victor realized that by playing God, he had not only created life, but also suffering. His actions had consequences, and he had to face them. But was it too late to fix his mistake?
