

Name _____

The Mystery of the Phantom Photos

In the colorful town of Alphaville, there was a famous photographer named Daphne. Daphne had a special camera that could take pictures of things that were invisible to the naked eye. One sunny afternoon, Daphne discovered that her latest photos showed mysterious phantom shapes. Excited and curious, she decided to investigate with her friends, Stephen and Sophie.

"Let's go to the old amphitheater," suggested Stephen. "It's the only place in Alphaville where strange things always happen." Daphne and Sophie agreed, and the three friends set off on their adventure. As they walked through the lively streets, they could hear the laughter of children and the melodies of street musicians.

When they reached the amphitheater, it looked deserted. Daphne took out her camera and began snapping photos. To their amazement, the pictures revealed phantom figures dancing and playing instruments. "Look at that!" exclaimed Sophie. "The phantoms are having their own concert!"

Stephen, always the thinker, proposed a theory. "Maybe the amphitheater is enchanted, and these phantoms are the spirits of musicians who performed here long ago." Daphne and Sophie nodded, intrigued by the idea.

As the sun began to set, the friends decided to join the phantom concert. Stephen picked up a stray tambourine, Sophie found an old flute, and Daphne clapped along to the rhythm. To their delight, the phantom figures seemed to respond, their movements becoming more lively and vibrant.

The magical music filled the air, creating an unforgettable evening. When the concert ended, the phantom figures slowly faded away, leaving the friends in awe. "We should come back and visit our phantom friends," said Sophie. "Absolutely," agreed Stephen. "And next time, we'll bring more instruments!"

Daphne smiled and took one last photo of the empty amphitheater. The picture still had a faint glow, a reminder of their extraordinary encounter. As they walked back home, they knew they had discovered something truly special in the heart of Alphaville.

