The Foreman and the Forest Festival

In a vibrant village, there lived a foreman named Fiona who was in charge of organizing the annual Forest Festival. Fiona had a great foresight, knowing exactly what needed to be done to make the festival a success.

Each year, she would foretell the best weather for the event and prepare everything beforehand.

One day, as she walked through the forest, she found an ancient tree with a forefather's mark, indicating it had been part of the village's history for generations. Fiona decided that this tree would be the centerpiece of the festival. She informed the villagers of her plan, and everyone was excited for the forthcoming event.

Fiona's foresight included organizing games and activities that foretold fun and excitement for all ages. She also planned a special dance around the tree to honor the forefathers of the village. As the festival day approached, Fiona forewarned the villagers about a possible rain shower and made sure there were enough tents and shelters.

On the day of the festival, the weather was perfect, just as Fiona had foretold. The village gathered around the ancient tree, and the festival was a huge success. The children played games that foretold their future talents, and everyone danced joyfully around the tree. Fiona's careful planning and foresight made the Forest Festival an unforgettable event for the village.
