Good Triumphs

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Some students may say Harry and Voldemort were similar because they were both orphans and talented wizards, but their choices made them different. Others may argue they had nothing in common because their values were opposite.
2. Answers will vary. Some may believe people are born good or evil, while others may argue that choices and experiences shape who they become.
3. Students should describe a personal experience where they had to make a tough decision and explain how they made the right choice.
4. Many stories about good versus evil teach us important lessons about bravery, kindness, and the power of making good choices. Students may share their thoughts on why these themes are meaningful.
