

Name _____

House Traits

At Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, students are sorted into one of four houses: Gryffindor, Hufflepuff, Ravenclaw, or Slytherin. Each house represents different values and personality traits. The Sorting Hat, a magical hat, decides where each student belongs based on their qualities and choices.

Gryffindor is known for bravery and courage. The students in this house are daring and never afraid to stand up for what is right. Harry Potter, along with his friends Ron and Hermione, is placed in Gryffindor because of his fearless nature and willingness to protect others. Famous Gryffindors, like Albus Dumbledore, prove that bravery is not just about fighting battles—it's also about making the right choices.

Hufflepuff values kindness, hard work, and loyalty. Students in this house are known for being friendly, fair, and dedicated. They may not always seek the spotlight, but they are some of the most trustworthy and dependable friends at Hogwarts. Cedric Diggory, a talented and honorable student, represents the best qualities of Hufflepuff.

Ravenclaw is the house for those who value intelligence, creativity, and wisdom. Ravenclaws love to learn and often think in unique ways. Their curiosity drives them to seek knowledge and solve difficult problems. Luna Lovegood, with her open mind and imaginative ideas, is a perfect example of a true Ravenclaw.

Slytherin is often misunderstood. While some of its members, like Draco Malfoy, seem unkind, the house itself values ambition, cunning, and resourcefulness. Slytherins are determined and willing to do what it takes to succeed. Even Severus Snape, a professor with a complex past, shows that being in Slytherin does not mean someone is bad—it means they are strong-willed and strategic.

Each house plays an important role in Hogwarts, and students of all houses contribute to the school in different ways. The Sorting Hat reminds students that they are more than just their talents or where they come from. In the end, their choices and actions define who they truly are.