Peter's Perfect Prank

In the bustling town of Prankville, there was a boy named Peter who was known for his playful pranks. Peter loved to make his friends laugh with his clever tricks. His pranks were always good-natured and never meant to hurt anyone.

One bright morning, Peter had a brilliant idea for a new prank. He decided to pretend that he had discovered a treasure map. He drew an old-looking map on a piece of parchment, complete with a big red X marking the spot of the hidden treasure. Peter planned to surprise his friends with a pretend treasure hunt.

Peter's friends, Priya, Preston, and Priscilla, gathered at his house to see the map. Their eyes widened with excitement when Peter explained that the treasure was hidden in the nearby park. They promptly grabbed their backpacks and set off on the adventure.

The map led them to various spots in the park. First, they followed a path lined with pretty primroses. Then, they crossed a wooden bridge over a pristine stream. Next, they passed a grove of pine trees and finally reached a patch of prickly bushes.

Peter pretended to study the map carefully. "The treasure should be right here," he said, pointing to the ground near the prickly bushes. They all started to dig. To their surprise, Priscilla's shovel hit something hard. She pulled out a small, rusty box.

Peter grinned as they opened the box to find it filled with colorful candies and a note that read, "To my best pals, enjoy this sweet surprise! - Peter."

Everyone laughed and praised Peter for his perfect prank. They sat under a tree, sharing the candies and talking about the fun adventure they had just experienced. Peter's prank had brought them closer together, and they all agreed it was the best prank ever.
