

Name _____

The Super Sleuths and the Slippery Slope

In the small town of Slumberland, there were two best friends named Sally and Slim who loved to solve mysteries. They called themselves the Super Sleuths. One winter, when the snow was falling softly and blanketing the town in white, they discovered a new mystery to solve.

It all started when they heard about the Slippery Slope, a hill in the woods that was perfect for sledding. But lately, something strange had been happening. Every time someone tried to sled down the hill, their sled would slide off course, and they would end up in a snowbank. The townspeople were puzzled and asked the Super Sleuths to investigate.

Sally and Slim packed their sleuthing supplies, including a magnifying glass, a flashlight, and a notebook. They trudged through the snow to the Slippery Slope, determined to find out what was causing the sleds to slide off course.

When they arrived, they noticed the slope was steep and covered in smooth, shiny ice. Sally suggested they examine the area where the sleds were sliding off. Using her magnifying glass, she looked closely at the snow and ice. "Look, Slim! There are small, slippery patches of ice here. It's almost like someone poured water to make it extra slick," she said. Slim nodded. "Let's follow these slippery patches and see where they lead."

The Super Sleuths followed the icy patches up the slope, and soon they found themselves at the top of the hill. There, they discovered an empty water bottle lying in the snow. "Aha! This must be what caused the problem," Slim said. "Someone poured water on the slope to make it slippery."

But who could have done it? Sally and Slim decided to stake out the hill and catch the culprit. They hid behind a large snowdrift and waited. After a while, they saw a group of mischievous squirrels carrying small bottles of water. The squirrels were giggling and having fun sliding down the hill themselves.

Sally and Slim approached the squirrels and explained how their fun was causing trouble for the townspeople. The squirrels felt sorry and promised to stop pouring water on the slope.

To make it up to the townspeople, the squirrels helped the Super Sleuths clear away the slippery patches of ice. They worked together, using shovels and salt to make the slope safe for sledding again.

The next day, the townspeople returned to the Slippery Slope and enjoyed sledding down the hill without any problems. Everyone thanked Sally and Slim for solving the mystery and making the slope safe again.

From that day on, the Super Sleuths became heroes in Slumberland, always ready to solve the next mystery and help their town.

