

ANSWERS WILL VARY

Ad hominem arguments are typically seen in the media, politics and real-life debates.

They are effective because people remember them, even though the accusations about a person's reputation may not be true. It convinces people to judge a person based on criticism of them personally rather than on the logic of their arguments.

Examples will vary.