

ANSWERS

1. the great barrier reef

2. Clownfish have a symbiotic relationship with anemones.

Clownfish are coated with a layer of mucus which keeps it safe from the anemone's poison. The clownfish lives in the anemone as a way to hide from predators, and the anemone stays healthy because the clownfish cleans it by eating any parasites that might otherwise make it sick.