Mouse's Turn

If you take a boy to school, you might expect an ordinary day, but not if the mouse is in charge! Instead of following a normal schedule, the mouse takes the boy on a wild and wacky adventure, turning an average school day into a whirlwind of fun.

First, the mouse insists that the boy bring a tiny backpack filled with everything a mouse would need—cheese snacks, a tiny notebook, and a very small pair of glasses. As soon as they arrive, the mouse rushes past the principal's office and into the classroom, dragging the boy along. Instead of sitting in his seat, the mouse scrambles onto the teacher's desk, demanding to be the teacher for the day.

The mouse starts the lesson by giving an assignment—building the biggest and best block tower ever! While the other students try to complete their work, the mouse races around the room, knocking over papers, rolling in pencil shavings, and climbing onto bookshelves. He writes math problems on the board, but they all have something in common—every answer is "cheese."

When it's time for lunch, the mouse leads the boy to the cafeteria, but instead of eating normal school food, he pulls out a picnic basket filled with fancy cheese. "Try the cheddar first!" he tells the boy. "No, wait—the Swiss! Actually, let's sample all 27 kinds I brought!" The boy barely has time to take a bite before the mouse is already dashing outside for recess.

At recess, the mouse turns the playground into a giant obstacle course. He makes the boy run through tunnels, swing from monkey bars like a jungle gym champion, and slide down the tallest slide five times in a row. Just as the boy is catching his breath, the mouse announces, "Time for science!" and drags him back inside.

In science class, the mouse decides they should mix every experiment together, just to see what happens. The result? A huge, bubbly explosion that makes the whole room smell like melted cheese! The teacher tries to restore order, but before anyone can clean up, the mouse suddenly remembers something—his tiny backpack! He races back to the classroom, opens it up, and realizes he forgot something important. The adventure is about to start all over again!

If a mouse took a boy to school, the day would be full of laughter, messes, and surprises. One thing's for sure—nobody would ever have a normal school day again!
