

Name _____

The Fantastic Flapjack Flying Contest

In the lively town of Flapville, there was an annual event that everyone loved—the Fantastic Flapjack Flying Contest. This contest was unique because it combined the town's love for delicious flapjacks (pancakes) and the excitement of flying them like frisbees.

Flora, a spirited girl with a love for cooking, was particularly excited about this year's contest. She had been practicing her flapjack-throwing skills every day after school. Her best friend, Fletcher, who was an expert at catching, helped her by retrieving the flapjacks and giving her tips.

On the day of the contest, the town square was filled with fluttering banners and the smell of freshly made flapjacks. Flora and Fletcher arrived early to get the best spot. They brought a basket full of perfectly cooked flapjacks, each one golden and fluffy.

When it was Flora's turn, she stepped up to the marked line, took a deep breath, and flung her flapjack with all her might. The flapjack flew through the air, flipping end over end, and landed neatly in the target area. The crowd cheered, and Fletcher gave her a thumbs-up.

Next, it was time for the final challenge: a relay race where participants had to flip flapjacks in a frying pan while running to the finish line. Flora and Fletcher teamed up, with Flora flipping the flapjack and Fletcher running.

The race started, and Flora expertly flipped the flapjack high into the air. Fletcher sprinted forward, catching it perfectly in the pan. They repeated this several times, their teamwork flawless, and crossed the finish line first. The crowd erupted in applause.

After the contest, the mayor of Flapville announced the winners. "The champions of the Fantastic Flapjack Flying Contest are Flora and Fletcher!" he declared. They were awarded a shiny silver spatula trophy and a year's supply of flapjack mix.

Flora and Fletcher were thrilled. They celebrated by sharing their flapjacks with everyone at the contest. It was a day filled with fun, friends, and flying flapjacks, and Flora couldn't wait to participate again next year.

