Grace's Great Treasure Hunt

In a grassy meadow near a grand forest, there lived a curious girl named Grace. Grace loved to explore and go on grand adventures with her friends. One bright morning, Grace found an old, green map in her grandmother's attic. The map had markings that led to a hidden treasure buried somewhere in the forest. Excited, Grace gathered her friends to go on a great treasure hunt.

Grace's friends were Greg the gopher, Greta the grasshopper, and Griffin the goat. Together, they studied the map and agreed to follow its clues. Their first stop was an old oak tree with a big, gnarled trunk. According to the map, they needed to look for a small, green stone near the tree.

Greg, with his keen eyes, spotted the stone quickly. It had an engraving on it that pointed them towards a grove of grapevines. They hurried to the grove, where Greta the grasshopper used her jumping skills to find another clue hidden among the grapes. The clue was a tiny, green leaf with a riddle written on it.

The riddle read: "Find the grand hill with a grassy top, where the golden sun never seems to stop." Grace and her friends thought hard and realized it must be the grassy hill on the edge of the forest. They raced to the hill and started to dig. Griffin the goat used his strong hooves to help dig up the ground.

After some digging, they found a large, green treasure chest buried in the soil. They opened it to find it filled with glittering gold coins, sparkling gems, and a note that read: "To the greatest explorers, your curiosity and teamwork have led you to this grand treasure."

Grace and her friends were thrilled with their discovery. They decided to share the treasure with everyone in their village. They knew that the real treasure was the great adventure they had shared and the strong friendship they had built.
