Thurgood Marshall: A Champion of Justice

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Thurgood Marshall's early experiences with discrimination made him determined to fight for equal rights and justice. He wanted to make sure that no one else had to go through what he did because of their race.
2. Thurgood Marshall was motivated by a strong sense of justice and a belief in the importance of equal rights for all. He wanted to make a better future for African Americans and all Americans.
3. The case of Brown v. Board of Education was important because it ended racial segregation in schools, making it possible for Black and white students to learn together and have equal educational opportunities.
4. Thurgood Marshall used the law to challenge racial segregation and discrimination. He argued cases in court to show that these practices were unconstitutional and unfair, leading to changes in the law to protect civil rights.
