Short Answer Key

1. The Greasers and Socs come from different social backgrounds, so they often assume the worst about each other.
2. Like Ponyboy, many modern teenagers feel pressure to act a certain way to fit in.
3. The Greasers rely on each other for support because they do not have strong families.
4. By the end of the novel, Ponyboy realizes that both Greasers and Socs have struggles and should not be judged by their wealth or status.
5. The novel teaches that judging someone only by their social group is unfair, and people should be seen for who they truly are.
