Easter in the Wild West

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. The Great Egg-Shooting Contest was likely popular in Dusty Gulch because it combined the excitement of competition with the skills of sharpshooting, which were highly valued in the Wild West. It reflected the spirit of the Wild West by showcasing marksmanship and the cowboy way of life.
2. The townsfolk wore cowboy hats, boots, and bandanas, which were typical Western attire. The festive outfits added to the atmosphere by giving the celebration a Wild West theme and creating a sense of unity among the participants.
3. The Easter Bunny likely chose a unique celebration in Dusty Gulch to embrace the local culture and traditions of the Old West. This made the celebration more exciting and memorable for the residents, while still retaining the essence of Easter.
4. The Dusty Gulch Easter celebration brought the community together by providing opportunities for people of all ages to participate in various activities, from the Great Egg-Shooting Contest to the Stick Pony Rodeo. These shared experiences fostered a sense of camaraderie, as people worked together and cheered for each other's successes. The campfire gathering at the end of the day allowed for storytelling and further strengthened the sense of community.
