Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Mrs. Wilson's revelation and the students' involvement in the Lunch Lady Club changed their perception of her from being just a lunch lady to a superhero who cared deeply about their school and community. They realized that heroes could be found in unexpected places, and it taught them not to judge people based on their appearances or job titles.
2. The students' teamwork and collaboration were essential in saving the treehouse. Emily's water control stabilized the supports, Daniel's super-speed allowed him to reinforce weak spots quickly, Sarah's ability to communicate with animals provided valuable information, and Alex's force field protected the treehouse. Each student's unique ability contributed to the success of their mission, highlighting the importance of working together.
3. Mrs. Wilson's mentorship went beyond teaching the students about their superpowers; she taught them valuable life lessons such as the importance of using their powers for good, helping others, and working as a team. They learned that anyone, regardless of their background or job, can be a hero when they make a positive impact on others.
4. Answers will vary. Students may choose superpowers like healing, teleportation, or the ability to make people happy. They could use these powers to help those in need, bring joy to others, or solve problems in their community.
