

Name _____

The Werewolf Family's Tricky Halloween Dinner

The Walker family lived on the outskirts of a small village surrounded by dense forests. They were no ordinary family; they were werewolves. As Halloween approached, they faced a unique challenge: how to enjoy a quiet dinner together during the full moon without transforming into their wolfish forms.

The Walker parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walker, were determined to have a peaceful Halloween dinner with their two children, Emily and Ethan. They knew that when the full moon rose, their instincts would kick in, and they would be irresistibly drawn to the woods to run and howl.

To make things even trickier, the Walkers had invited their human neighbors, the Andersons, over for a spooky Halloween feast. The Andersons were unaware of the Walkers' secret, and the Walkers wanted to keep it that way.

On Halloween evening, the Walkers prepared a delicious dinner of roast chicken, mashed potatoes, and pumpkin pie. The tantalizing aroma filled the air as they set the table with eerie decorations and lit candles in carved pumpkin lanterns.

As the full moon began to rise, the Walkers sat down to eat. They could feel their transformation urge growing stronger with each passing minute. Mr. Walker tried to distract himself by telling ghost stories, while Mrs. Walker and the kids tried to eat quickly.

Just as dessert was about to be served, the transformation began. Fur sprouted, claws appeared, and the family's eyes glowed a haunting yellow. The Andersons gasped in surprise, dropping their forks.

Mr. Walker quickly ushered the Andersons into the living room and whispered, "Don't be alarmed. We have a little family tradition during Halloween. Just stay in here for a while, and we'll take care of everything."

The Walker family retreated to the backyard, where they could run freely as wolves and enjoy the full moon. They howled at the sky and played together until their transformations began to wane.

When they returned inside, the Andersons were sitting nervously on the couch. Mrs. Walker apologized for the "family tradition" and explained that it was a bit unusual but entirely harmless.

To their surprise, the Andersons chuckled and confessed that they had their own quirky Halloween traditions. They were fascinated by the Walkers' secret and promised to keep it safe.

As they all sat down to share pumpkin pie, they realized that Halloween had brought two very different families together, bonded by their love for unique traditions and acceptance of each other's quirks.