

Name _____

The Great Cornucopia Caper

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. If I were one of the kids in the group, I would have felt a combination of shock, panic, and guilt when the cornucopia tipped over. Immediately after, I would have rushed to check if anyone was hurt and then admitted to my friends that we needed to take responsibility for our actions.
2. The townspeople's forgiveness was a fair response to the kids' actions because the children had confessed and shown genuine remorse. The townspeople understood that it was a youthful mistake and appreciated the kids' honesty and willingness to make amends.
3. The kids' involvement in the restoration efforts likely strengthened their relationship with the townspeople. By volunteering their time to help repair and restore the cornucopia, the children demonstrated their commitment to making things right and contributing positively to the community. This act of goodwill would have earned them the respect and trust of the townspeople.
4. The kids learned several valuable lessons from this experience. They learned about the consequences of their actions and the importance of honesty and taking responsibility for their mistakes. They also learned the power of unity and community support in times of adversity. This experience might lead them to think twice before engaging in pranks that could harm or damage important symbols in their town.
