The 100th-Day Aging Accident

Meet the zany characters of Lakeside Elementary School:

- Max, the class clown with a penchant for pranks;
- Sophie, the science whiz known for her wild experiments;
- Mr. Bumblebee, the eccentric beekeeping teacher;
- Mrs. Chatterbox, the talkative librarian with an endless supply of stories.

On the morning of the 100th day of school, Max stumbled upon an old book titled "101 Ways to Celebrate the 100th Day." Intrigued, he decided to try one of the wackiest ideas from the book: creating a potion that would make the day unforgettable. Unbeknownst to Max, the potion recipe had a small typo.

With Sophie's help, Max gathered the ingredients for the potion, which included honey from Mr. Bumblebee's bees, an old watch from the school's lost-and-found box, and a pinch of laughter from Mrs. Chatterbox's endless storytelling.

They mixed the ingredients in a cauldron and chanted a rhyme from the book, but Max accidentally mispronounced the last word. Instead of making the day unforgettable, a bright flash of light turned their classmates into 100-year-old versions of themselves!

Now, Lakeside Elementary was filled with elderly students struggling with walkers, hearing aids, and reading glasses. The once vibrant school had turned into a senior citizen's center.

Max and Sophie, feeling guilty and panicked, sought Mr. Bumblebee's advice. He chuckled and said, "To reverse the spell, you need to create a potion using the same ingredients, but this time, pronounce the last word correctly!"

As they hurriedly gathered the ingredients, Max remembered the word from the book: "Gobbleflop!" With a correct incantation, a second flash of light engulfed the school, and the students were back to their youthful selves.

The 100th day turned out to be truly unforgettable, but not in the way Max had intended. It became the talk of Lakeside Elementary, with everyone sharing their funny experiences as 100-year-olds for a day.
