The Pirate's Treasure and the Betrayal at Sea

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. The pirate and his crew were determined to find treasure because they were motivated by greed and the desire for wealth and riches.
2. Greed caused the pirate crew to become distrustful and eventually led to a mutiny as they all wanted a larger share of the treasure.
3. The pirate and his crew might have avoided the mutiny and kept the treasure if they had shared it more fairly or resolved their disputes peacefully. Alternatively, they could have chosen not to let greed drive their actions.
4. In the end, the pirate and his crew might have learned the consequences of greed and betrayal, as their quest for treasure led to the loss of both the treasure and their unity as a crew. They may have also learned the importance of trust and cooperation in achieving their goals.
