Breaking Free

In a house of expectations, I was born,
Bound by family ties since the day I dawned,
Their dreams for me, their hopes and schemes,
A weight on my shoulders, a world of dreams.
They saw a path, clear and defined,
But in my heart, a different world I'd find,
A longing for freedom, my own way to steer,
To break free from their expectations, so clear.
I yearned to fly, to chart my course,
To follow my dreams without remorse,
But the whispers of tradition, the chains of old,
Held me back, my story left untold.
Their love was strong, their intentions pure,
But in the shadow of their dreams, I felt unsure,
I knew I must find the courage to defy,
To spread my wings, to reach for the sky.
I ventured out, a heart unbound,
In search of my dreams, my destiny found,
Though the road was uncertain, the future unclear,
I'd face it head-on, without a hint of fear.
The weight of family expectations, I carried long,
But in my independence, I grew strong,
With love in my heart and dreams to chase,
I'd make my own path, at my own pace.
