Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Students might say they would stay calm, listen to the guide, or avoid the trip entirely.
2. Some may argue that Eckels was responsible because he ignored the rules, while others might say the company should have been more careful in choosing clients.
3. Students could share personal examples, like saying something kind that cheered someone up or making a small mistake that caused unexpected consequences.
4. Responses might explore how every decision we make, big or small, can affect others and shape the future.
