Short Answer Key

1. Some crayons were overworked from being used too much, while others felt ignored and left out.
2. Duncan used all the crayons in new ways, like making a pink fire truck and a black castle, so every crayon had an important role.
3. Duncan's new artwork symbolized fairness, creativity, and the importance of making sure everyone is included.
4. It was important because both crayons wanted to be the color of the sun, and using them together helped them both feel valued.
5. Duncan's solution was fair because he gave each crayon a role, and it was creative because he used colors in new and exciting ways.
