Frog Talk - Open-Ended Questions

1. Frogs might use different ways to communicate because different environments and situations need different signals. For example, sounds work well in open areas, while scents are useful in dense forests.
2. I might find sounds most useful because they can travel far and be heard by other frogs easily. Sounds could help me call out or warn others from a distance.
3. In a busy forest, there are many noises and distractions, so it might be hard for frog calls to be heard. Scents might help, but they could be harder to pick up in such a crowded area.
4. A frog's environment affects communication because sounds travel differently in different places. In a quiet pond, sounds might work well, but in a noisy forest, scents or body language might be more effective.
