Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Initially, the Johnsons were hesitant and resistant to Grandma Millie's traditional activities. However, as they saw the fun and bonding that could come from embracing both tradition and modernity, their attitudes evolved, and they became more open to trying new things.
2. The grandchildren played a crucial role in suggesting modern activities and showing enthusiasm for both traditional and modern games, helping their parents and grandma find common ground.
3. Grandma Millie felt pleased and content when she saw her family enjoying modern games because she realized that family unity and happiness were more important than rigidly sticking to tradition. The lesson here is that flexibility and compromise can lead to stronger family bonds.
4. Answers may vary, but a possible response is that the family reunion became unforgettable because the Johnsons learned to appreciate each other's values, found a way to combine tradition and modernity, and enjoyed quality time together as a family, creating lasting memories and strengthening their relationships.
