

Name _____

The Ghostly Game of Hide and Seek

In a sleepy town called Spooksville, where every day felt like Halloween, there lived a group of friendly ghosts who loved to play games. Their favorite game of all was "Hide and Seek," but with a ghostly twist.

The leader of the ghostly gang was Casper the Jolly Ghost. Casper had a habit of telling jokes that could make you laugh so hard you'd float in the air. He decided it was time for a new twist on their old game, so he gathered his fellow spirits for a spooky game of Hide and Seek.

One dark and misty night, as the full moon cast an eerie glow over the town, the ghosts gathered in the old, abandoned mansion at the edge of Spooksville. Casper explained the rules: the one who was "it" would count to ten while the others hid, and when they found someone, they'd say, "Boo!"

The game began, and the ghosts vanished into the shadows. The mansion echoed with giggles and whispers as they searched for the perfect hiding spots. Ghostly giggles were even harder to contain than regular giggles, so it wasn't long before the whole mansion was filled with laughter.

Casper, with his glowing head, was "it." He began counting to ten, "One... Two... Three..." The other ghosts giggled and tried to find their hiding spots quickly. They disappeared into walls, floated through floors, and even squeezed behind dusty old bookshelves.

Casper finished counting and began to search. He floated from room to room, shouting "Boo!" and causing giggles to erupt whenever he found one of his ghostly friends. The game continued late into the night, with Casper finding one ghost after another.

Finally, it was just Casper and his best friend, Wendy the Whimsical Ghost, left to be found. Casper searched high and low, but Wendy had hidden herself so well that he couldn't find her anywhere. He looked behind curtains, under furniture, and even inside a grandfather clock, but Wendy was nowhere to be seen.

Just as Casper was about to give up, Wendy couldn't contain her laughter any longer and appeared in a puff of giggles. "You found me, Casper! You win!" she said, and they both burst into laughter.

The ghostly gang had so much fun that they decided to play again the next night. And so, in the town of Spooksville, the ghosts played their ghostly game of Hide and Seek every night, filling the air with laughter that echoed through the haunted streets.