

Name _____

Mythological Tale: The Quest for the Golden Apple

Once upon a time in the mystical land of Olympus, there was a great contest among the gods. Zeus, the king of the gods, had decided to hold a competition to determine who was the mightiest among them. He called upon three of his most powerful children: Athena, the goddess of wisdom; Apollo, the god of music and prophecy; and Hermes, the swift messenger god. Each of them was given a quest, and the one who succeeded would be awarded the coveted Golden Apple of Olympus, a symbol of ultimate power and prestige.

Athena's quest was to find the lost city of Atlantis and bring back its most treasured artifact, the Spear of Poseidon. Apollo's challenge was to retrieve the legendary Lyre of Orpheus from the underworld. Hermes was tasked with finding the rarest flower in the world, the Starflower, hidden deep within the enchanted forest of Nymphs.

The three siblings embarked on their journeys, each determined to prove their worth. Athena dove into the depths of the ocean, where she encountered fierce sea monsters and solved riddles to reach Atlantis. Apollo ventured into the dark and eerie underworld, outwitting the guardian Cerberus and charming Hades with his beautiful music. Hermes faced the whimsical Nymphs in the enchanted forest, who tested his wit and agility before revealing the location of the Starflower.

After months of trials and tribulations, Athena, Apollo, and Hermes returned to Olympus with their respective prizes. Zeus called upon the other gods to witness their achievements. He asked, "Who among you has completed the most challenging quest and deserves the Golden Apple?"

The gods debated for hours, but no one could decide. Finally, Zeus summoned a mortal named Paris, known for his fairness and wisdom, to make the ultimate decision. Paris carefully examined each treasure and listened to the stories of the gods. In the end, he chose Athena as the winner for her bravery and intellect.

Athena was presented with the Golden Apple, and she graciously accepted her victory. The other gods acknowledged her as the wisest among them, and she continued to be revered as the goddess of wisdom for all eternity.