How Guppies Talk Without Words

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Guppies likely rely on movements and colors because they live in water, where sound doesn't travel as well, and bright displays are easier to notice.
2. Pheromones help guppies survive by sending invisible signals about danger or mating opportunities, which are crucial in the wild.
3. In an aquarium, you might see guppies chasing each other, performing dances, or swimming quickly to hide when startled.
4. Guppy communication shows that even small actions like movements and signals can help groups stay safe and work together for survival.
