The Hilarious Haunting of Room 13B

At Franklin Middle School, Room 13B had quite a reputation. It was said to be haunted by the ghost of Mr. Jenkins, a former teacher who loved pranks when he was alive. Legend had it that Mr. Jenkins still played tricks on unsuspecting students from beyond the grave.

One chilly October morning, a group of friends, Sam, Amy, and Max, decided to spend the night in Room 13B to see if the ghostly rumors were true. Armed with flashlights, snacks, and their courage, they entered the room.

As they settled in, the lights flickered, and a mysterious voice boomed, "Who dares to enter my domain?"

The trio exchanged nervous glances but remained determined. They introduced themselves and explained their mission to uncover the truth about the haunted room.

The ghostly voice chuckled and said, "Very well, let the pranks begin!"

Suddenly, the chairs started spinning on their own, and the chalkboard filled with silly drawings. Max's backpack floated in mid-air, and Amy's candy bars danced a tango. Sam's flashlight turned into a disco ball, casting colorful lights around the room.

The friends burst into laughter, realizing that Mr. Jenkins was indeed a prankster, even in the afterlife. They decided to join in the fun, playing along with the mischievous ghost.

They challenged Mr. Jenkins to a game of hide-and-seek, but every time they counted to ten, he hid in the most unexpected places. Once, he disguised himself as a floating balloon and another time as a talking chair.

As the night went on, they shared ghost stories, gobbled down snacks, and enjoyed the ghostly antics. By dawn, they were exhausted from laughter and pranks.

The sun's first rays revealed the room's ordinary appearance, and Mr. Jenkins finally appeared in a puff of smoke, taking a bow. "Well done, my young friends! You've passed the ultimate test of humor and courage."

From that day on, Room 13B lost its haunted reputation and became known as the "Room of Laughter." The hilarious haunting of Room 13B had transformed it into a place where students and Mr. Jenkins himself shared endless laughter and unforgettable memories.
