1. Houseflies are successful in many environments because they are adaptable and can find food in human-made and natural areas.
2. Humans create waste and scraps, which attract houseflies to areas where people live.
3. A housefly-proof area might include sealed trash cans, screens on windows, and proper food storage to keep flies out.
4. Houseflies are not found in Antarctica because it is too cold, and there is little food or shelter available.
