Early Life and Education

Nas Daily was born on February 9, 1992, in Arraba, Israel. He grew up in a small Palestinian town, where he was always curious about the world. He worked hard in school and later attended Harvard University, one of the most famous universities in the world. He studied aerospace engineering, which is the science of designing airplanes and rockets.

Even though he loved science, Nas also loved storytelling. After college, he realized that he didn't want a normal job. Instead, he wanted to travel the world and share amazing stories.

The 1,000-Day Video Challenge

In 2016, Nas quit his job as a software engineer and started making daily 1-minute videos. He decided to do this for 1,000 days straight! His goal was to show the beauty of the world and the people in it. At first, not many people watched his videos. But soon, more and more people started following him because his videos were positive, fun, and educational. He traveled to over 100 countries and met people from different backgrounds.

One of his most famous videos is about a man who planted an entire forest by himself. Another video tells the story of a village where everyone is deaf, but they all communicate in sign language.

Building a Business

After completing his 1,000-day challenge, Nas did not stop. He created Nas Academy, a platform to help others learn about content creation. He also started Nas Studios, which makes videos for different businesses and organizations.

Nas believes that anyone can be a storyteller. His goal is to teach people how to use video to share their ideas and inspire others.
