Unlocking the Secrets of NGO Governance and Structures

Short Answer Key

1. Membership-based NGOs involve their members in decision-making through elections, voting on key decisions, and shaping the organization's direction based on member input.
2. A board of directors in an NGO guides the organization's strategic direction, financial decisions, and compliance with regulations. They oversee governance and provide leadership.
3. Possible answer: A project-based NGO structure could be an environmental organization that focuses on specific conservation projects. Each project has its team, budget, and leadership structure, allowing for specialization and effectiveness.
4. A flat organizational structure in an NGO encourages collaboration among employees and volunteers, minimizes hierarchy, and allows for innovative and agile responses to challenges.
5. Community-based organizations (CBOs) prioritize community input by involving community-elected leaders, conducting community consultations, and ensuring that decisions align with the community's needs and aspirations.
