The Influence of Parenting Styles on Child Development

Short Answer Key

1. Some characteristics of authoritative parenting include being warm, loving, responsive to children's needs, and setting clear rules and expectations.
2. Children raised by authoritarian parents might feel pressured to follow rules without question.
3. A potential consequence of neglectful parenting on a child's self-esteem could be low self-worth due to a lack of emotional support.
4. Finding a balance in parenting styles is important for child development because it ensures that children receive both emotional support and reasonable rules, creating a healthy environment.
5. One positive aspect of permissive parenting is that children may have a lot of freedom.
