NGOs as Changemakers: Advocating for Policy Changes

Short Answer Key

1. NGOs use research and data collection to provide evidence-based insights into the issues they advocate for, supporting their arguments with facts and statistics.
2. Alliances and collaboration with like-minded organizations, experts, and communities strengthen NGOs' advocacy efforts, enhance their reach, and amplify their voices.
3. Grassroots mobilization influences policymakers' decisions by involving local communities and citizens, whose support and voices can sway policy choices.
4. Possible answer: An NGO may engage in legal action to challenge discriminatory employment practices and advocate for policy changes to ensure workplace equality.
5. NGOs use public pressure and petitions to mobilize citizens and put pressure on policymakers through signatures, letter-writing campaigns, and protests.
