

Name _____

The Great Class President Race

Once upon a time, in the bustling halls of Oakwood Elementary School, something exciting was brewing. It was that time of year when students from all grades were gearing up for the most thrilling event of the school year - the Class President Election! But this year, things were about to get a whole lot crazier!

The buzz began when three brave fifth graders decided to run for class president. Each of them had big dreams and even bigger campaign promises. The whole school was in for a wild ride!

First up was Max. Max was known for his love of science and his incredible sense of humor. He decided to run for class president with a promise that left everyone in stitches. He declared, "If I become class president, I'll make it snow ice cream every Friday at lunchtime!" Max believed he could turn the school into a winter wonderland, and the idea quickly caught on.

Max's campaign was a flurry of activity. He put up posters featuring ice cream cones wearing scarves and mittens. He even set up a "snow machine" in the schoolyard during recess, which turned out to be nothing more than a bubble machine with a snowman costume on top. Kids laughed and enjoyed the "snow" while Max handed out cotton candy "snowballs."

Next up was Sarah, a talented artist and a big fan of adventure books. Sarah promised, "If I win, I'll install a zip line from the top floor to the bottom floor of the school!" Her campaign posters featured daring kids soaring through the halls, and she even brought in a small zip line for everyone to try during lunch break.

Sarah's campaign rallies were a hit. Kids zipped from one end of the hall to the other, and they loved it so much that some even forgot to cast their votes because they were having too much fun zooming around. Teachers had to remind everyone about the election!

Last but not least was Alex, a sports enthusiast with a passion for games. Alex's promise was the most jaw-dropping of all: "If I'm elected, I'll have a giant water balloon fight every afternoon after school!" His campaign was filled with water balloons of all colors and sizes. There were posters of kids having the time of their lives in epic water balloon battles.

Name _____

Alex's campaign events were a splashy spectacle. He organized mini water balloon fights during recess, and even the teachers joined in on the fun. Kids couldn't resist the allure of getting drenched in colorful water balloons, and soon, they were chanting Alex's name everywhere they went.

As the election day drew near, the school had turned into a whirlwind of snow cones, zip lines, and water balloons. It seemed like the students cared more about the wild campaign promises than the actual candidates! But the three candidates had to remember that their promises were all in good fun and not to be taken too seriously.

On election day, the students lined up to cast their votes. Max, Sarah, and Alex were nervously waiting for the results. As the votes were counted, the tension in the air was palpable. Finally, the moment of truth arrived, and the principal announced the winner.

"To our surprise," said the principal, "the students have spoken, and our new class president is... Max!" The cafeteria erupted in cheers, and Max couldn't believe his ears. He had won the election with his crazy promise of ice cream snowstorms.

As Max stepped up to the podium for his acceptance speech, he grinned from ear to ear. "I may not be able to make it snow ice cream, but together, we can create some awesome memories this year!" And with that, he held up a snow globe filled with sprinkles, and the whole school burst into applause.

In the end, the campaign filled with outrageous stunts had brought the entire school closer together. Max, Sarah, and Alex may not have been able to fulfill their over-the-top promises, but they had certainly made Oakwood Elementary School a more exciting and fun place to be. And who knows what adventures the new class president, Max, had in store for his fellow students? One thing was for sure - it was going to be a year to remember!

