Do Rabbits Form Relationships with Other Species?

Short Answer Key

1. In a mutualistic relationship, both species benefit.
2. Fleas or ticks harm rabbits by feeding on them and causing health problems like infections or weakness.
3. Rabbits are prey for predators like foxes and hawks, helping to balance the food chain.
4. Other animals might use a rabbit's burrow for shelter or protection.
5. Rabbits spread seeds through their droppings, which help plants grow in new areas.
