

Name _____

Unlocking Communication: A Day in the Life of a Speech-Language Pathologist

Short Answer Key

1. The primary responsibility of a Speech-Language Pathologist is to help individuals with speech and language disorders improve their communication skills.
2. One important skill that Speech-Language Pathologists need to have is empathy.
3. An example of a task a Speech-Language Pathologist might do in the afternoon is providing individual or group therapy sessions to patients.
4. Attention to detail is important for Speech-Language Pathologists because they need to maintain detailed records of patient progress and adjust treatment plans as needed.
5. Speech-Language Pathologists collaborate with other healthcare professionals by working together to develop treatment plans and provide comprehensive care to patients.

