Summer's Starry Night

Beneath the velvet canvas of a summer's night,
The stars emerge, a wondrous sight,
Twinkling gems in the vast expanse,
A celestial dance, a cosmic trance.
As darkness falls, the world grows still,
The moon ascends, its glow to fill,
The night with silvery beams of grace,
Illuminating each secret place.
The Milky Way, a river of light,
Stretches across the heavens, so bright,
Like a celestial highway, it beckons to explore,
The beauty of the night, we can't ignore.
The constellations, stories of old,
In the sky's pages, their tales are told,
Orion hunts with his bow and his sword,
A mythical figure, by starlight adored.
Jupiter and Mars, planets afar,
A cosmic ballet, a celestial star,
They twirl and they glide in the inky black,
An astronomical performance, there's no lack.
And as the night deepens, the meteors soar,
Shooting stars, wishes galore,
We close our eyes and make a desire,
Beneath the summer's celestial fire.
The beauty of a summer night's sky,
A mesmerizing spectacle that catches the eye,
A reminder of the wonders above,
In the embrace of the night, we find love.
