Taxes & Trouble

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. The colonists were angry because they had no say in British government but were still forced to pay taxes.
2. Boycotting British goods hurt Britain's economy, which pressured them to change their policies.
3. If Britain had not passed the Intolerable Acts, some colonists might not have supported independence.
4. Economic policies like taxes and trade laws made colonists feel controlled and pushed them toward fighting for independence.
