The Absurd Adventures of Teenage Tomfoolery

Short Answer Key

1. Tom's replacement of stop signs contributed to chaos in Mundanville because drivers hesitated at intersections when faced with signs that read, "Pause if You Feel Like It," leading to bizarre traffic jams of indecision.
2. Tom started a campaign in front of the local library to make books more accessible through emojis. His placard read, "Books  = .
3. Tom's absurdity initially confused and concerned the town's adults and Principal Prudence. They held emergency meetings to discuss issues like "Emoji Books" and debated Tom's campaign promises, like "Unlimited Ice Cream for All."
4. The "Synchronized Couch Potato Marathon" involved participants sitting on their sofas, watching TV together, and receiving medals for minimal physical activity. It marked the peak of absurdity in the story, as people celebrated doing nothing.
5. As a result of Tom's campaign, Mundanville transformed into Whimsyville, where absurdity reigned supreme. Tom Johnson became the celebrated Mayor of Tomfoolery.
