

Name _____

The Memory Thief

Once upon a time in the quirky town of Forgetsville, there lived a peculiar character known as the Memory Thief. The Memory Thief, whose real name was Oswald Bumblebee, had an unusual hobby—he stole people's memories! Not just any memories, mind you, but the most bizarre and random ones he could find.

One sunny morning, the Memory Thief woke up with a mischievous grin. He had a plan to steal the silliest memory yet. He put on his polka-dotted pajamas, a pair of neon green sneakers, and a feathered hat that looked like it came from a Dr. Seuss book. Fully disguised, he headed to the local park where he knew he'd find his next target.

At the park, the Memory Thief spotted a group of people playing a game of "Extreme Duck, Duck, Goose." The rules were simple: instead of gently tapping someone's head and saying "Duck," you had to launch a rubber chicken at them while shouting "Goose!" It was a hilarious spectacle, and the Memory Thief couldn't resist.

As the game went on, the Memory Thief managed to snatch a memory from a man named Bob. Bob's stolen memory? The time he accidentally wore his wife's dress to a fancy dinner party! The Memory Thief couldn't help but chuckle as he made his getaway.

Back at his hideout, the Memory Thief reviewed his stolen memories, laughing hysterically at each one. He had a collection of peculiar memories, including someone who forgot how to tie their shoes, another who mistook their cat for a kangaroo, and now Bob's unforgettable fashion faux pas.

Little did the Memory Thief know that Bob, determined to get his memory back, had hired a forgetfulness detective named Lucy Larkspur. Lucy had a knack for tracking down lost memories, and she was hot on the trail.

Now, the Memory Thief was in for a wild adventure as he tried to evade Lucy, who was determined to recover Bob's memory and put an end to his memory-stealing shenanigans.