What Are a Monkey's Predators and Threats?

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Living in groups helps monkeys watch for predators, share food, and care for each other, making survival easier.
2. Climate change affects monkeys by changing weather patterns, which can reduce food availability and damage their habitats.
3. Young monkeys might face more dangers because they are smaller, less experienced, and more vulnerable to predators and health problems.
4. Protecting monkeys and their habitats is important because they play a key role in their ecosystems, like spreading seeds and maintaining forest health.
