Rabbit Predators and Threats

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Rabbits face many threats because they are prey animals, live in exposed areas, and are affected by both natural predators and human activities.
2. Losing their habitat might make rabbits spend more time searching for food and shelter, which could expose them to more predators.
3. Humans could protect rabbit habitats by preserving natural areas, planting grasses and shrubs, and reducing hunting or trapping.
4. Rabbits have adapted to survive by being fast, using burrows for safety, and reproducing quickly to maintain their population.
