Unveiling Myself

In the mirror's gleam, I see a face,
A canvas of life, a changing space,
I search for clues, I yearn to find,
The me I am inside my mind.
I've worn masks of different shades,
Hiding truths in endless charades,
But beneath the layers I've concealed,
A self unknown, a truth unsealed.
I've donned the jester's cap for fun,
Pretended to be anyone,
Yet in the stillness of the night,
I wonder, "Am I getting it right?"
The world expects, it sets the mold,
But deep within, a story untold,
I long to break the chains that bind,
To discover the me that's undefined.
In moments quiet, when no one sees,
I let my guard down, drop to my knees,
I seek the answers buried deep,
To understand the self I keep.
Is identity a puzzle to be solved,
A mystery in which we're all involved?
I'll journey forth, explore with glee,
The me that's waiting to be free.
