The Big City Beckon: What Drives Rural-to-Urban Migration?

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Rural-to-urban migration is the movement of people from rural areas to urban areas, driven by factors like economic opportunities, access to better education and healthcare, improved infrastructure, and cultural attractions. It is important for individuals and families seeking a better quality of life and for cities as they grow and diversify their populations.
2. Answers may vary but could include reasons like seeking better job opportunities, access to education and healthcare, escape from agricultural challenges, or a desire for a more modern and convenient lifestyle.
3. Improved access to education and healthcare in urban areas can lead to a more educated and healthier workforce, contributing to economic development and improved living standards for the entire region or country.
4. Cultural attractions and social activities in cities can enrich the lives of residents and provide opportunities for personal growth, which may influence people to migrate from rural areas in search of new experiences and a more vibrant community.
