Sibling Soldiers: Bound by Service

Open-Ended Response Answer Key

1. Sarah and Michael's strong bond as siblings likely provided them with emotional support and motivation during their military service. They had a unique understanding of each other's challenges and sacrifices, which strengthened their connection and ability to provide mutual support.
2. Celebrating holidays and special occasions allowed Sarah and Michael to maintain a sense of family connection and tradition despite the physical distance. It helped them stay emotionally close and provided a sense of normalcy amidst the challenges of military life.
3. The display of both the Army and Navy flags likely made Sarah and Michael feel equally valued and supported in their chosen paths. It emphasized that their parents were proud of their service and recognized the significance of both branches in their lives.
4. Meeting in person allowed Sarah and Michael to create shared memories, strengthen their emotional connection, and deepen their understanding of each other's military experiences. It solidified their bond as both siblings and comrades in arms.
