

Name _____

The Wacky Watermelon Race

In the sunny town of Fruitville, there was a yearly tradition that brought joy to all the fruits and vegetables—The Wacky Watermelon Race! This exciting event was held at the Fruitville Park and was known far and wide for its hilarious antics.

One bright morning, Waterly the Watermelon woke up with excitement bubbling inside her. She had always dreamt of participating in the race, and this year, she was finally old enough. Waterly was known for her round shape and the little seeds on her green skin, but she had a secret advantage. She was one of the juiciest watermelons in all of Fruitville!

As the race began, Waterly's fruity friends, Berry the Blueberry and Cherry the Cherry, cheered her on from the sidelines. The racecourse was filled with colorful obstacles made of giant forks, spoons, and even a slippery slide made of banana peels.

Waterly rolled down the path, avoiding forks and spoons like a pro. But then, she reached the banana peel slide. With a deep breath, she launched herself onto the slide. Whee! She zoomed down, spinning in every direction. The crowd roared with laughter!

Meanwhile, Berry and Cherry decided to join in on the fun. They hopped onto the slide as well, creating a fruity traffic jam. They tumbled and rolled, and soon, the entire slide was a fruity frenzy.

The race continued through a maze of giant grapes and an apple tunnel. Waterly's juicy nature helped her slide through the grapes effortlessly. She burst out of the apple tunnel, rolling toward the finish line.

Just as Waterly was about to cross the finish line, Berry and Cherry playfully bumped into her, sending her flying like a watermelon cannonball. She soared through the air, landing in a pool of fruit punch. The crowd erupted into laughter!

Even though Waterly didn't win the race, she had the time of her life. Covered in fruit punch, she grinned from ear to ear. The Wacky Watermelon Race was not just about winning but about having wacky, fruity fun.

And so, every year, Waterly and her fruity friends looked forward to the Wacky Watermelon Race, where laughter, spills, and fruity adventures filled the air.